In this paper I am not doing away with the United Nations but rather I am making changes which could be used in the present U. N. or in a new world body. If nothing is said about a topic it can be assumed that it is remaining the same as in the present U. N. charter. The principals and purposes will remain exactly as they are.

Membership:

Membership shall be open to all peace loving states which accept the obligations of the league and are willing to carry them out. The admission of a state to membership will be by the general assembly upon recommendation of the security council, or the lower house may propose a member which must be voted on by the security council. The veto can't be used on voting in a new member.

A member against whom action has or is being taken by the security council may be suspended from the exercise of the rights and privileges of membership in the general assembly upon recommendation by either house and voted upon by the other.

A member who has consistantly violated the principals of the league may be expelled from the organization by 3/4 vote in both houses upon recommendation of either house. This I feel gives the assembly more say in its membership.

ORGANS:

There will be three main branches: An upper house (sec. council), a lower house (gen. assembly), and a secretariat. Besides these there will be an Economic and Social council, a Trusteeship council, and an International court of justice. Any subsidiary organs may be created if found necessary for carrying out the functions of the designated organs.

LOWER HOUSE: (General assembly)

The lower house will consist of all members of the league. Each member shall not have more than 3 representatives.

The lower house may discuss any questions or matters within the scope of the charter or relating to the powers and functions of any organs provided for in the charter and may make recommendations to members of the league and to the security council. When the security council is exercising in respect of any dispute or situation the functions assigned it the general assembly may make recommendations regarding the dispute which the security council may or may not consider. This allows the assembly to make recommendations when it wishes and not just when the security council requests it on a given situation.

The general assembly may call attention of the security council to situations which are likely to endanger international peace and security.

The secretary general shall notify the general assembly at each session of any matters relative to the maintenance of international peace which are being dealt with by the security

SECURITY COUNCIL:

The security council will have 21 members. ~~and~~ This is to give more nations a say in the main body. There will be 6 permanent members as follows: The United States, Russia, Great Briton, France, India, and Red China. I include Red China as it is the largest nation of the world as far as population goes and therefore I feel it should have a place on any international organization. However I will make this stipulation; in order to keep their seat on the security council they must strictly abide by the purposes and principals to the letter or imediate and severe action will be taken. I include India for several reasons, (1) it is the recognized leader of the neutralist block (2) if the Kashmir dispute is settled then it is potentially a strong country. (3) It is the second largest in population. I feel that this is the change that ought to be made. West Germany, of course, is stronger as is Japan but the attitude of the uest of the world toward them is still as the aggressers of World War II and they would not be accepted. In a few more years,perhaps.

The other 15 members will be elected for 3 year terms instead of 2 by the general assembly. I feel that 21 members is a workable size and gives about $\frac{1}{4}$ of the members a say. Each member will have one representative.

The security council will have primary responsibility for the maintanence of international peace and security.

The members of the league must agree to carry out the decisions of the security council in accordance with the purposes and principals of the charter. The security council is responsible for formulating, with the assistance of the military staff committee, plans for the establishment of a system for the regulation of armements.

Voting: Each member has one vote. Decisions on procedural matters shall be made by 14 affirmative votes. Decisions on all other matters will be by 14 affirmative votes with the following constituting a veto: 3 permanent members, or 2 permanent members and 5 nonpermanent. The latter will allow a veto even though there are 14 affirmative votes. The security council may replace a nation that is a permanent member of the security council if (1) one of the permanent members consistently violates the basic principals and practices of the charter or (2) If a country loses the power to warrant a seat on the council (as is the case with Nationalist China) and another more powerful nation warrants that seat. If the first case is the reason for expulsion the council may operate with only 5 permanent members but must begin immediately to consider a replacement. To be voted from a permanent seat on the security council there must be 17 affirmative votes with all the other 5 permanent members in unanimous agreement and the country in question abstaining. In this case 1 permanent member constitutes a veto. If this passes the security council the general assembly must pass the action by a 2/3 majority. If this occurs then the expulsion of the member is complete from the security council but the member is still entitled to the privileges of membership in the general assembly, unless voted otherwise by the general assembly as may be the case if the reason for expulsion is violating the principals and purposes.

Settlement of disputes: The security council may decide what measures not involving use of armed force are to be employed to give effect to its decisions and may call upon members of the league to apply such measures. These may include (1) Complete or partial interruption of economic relations and of rail, sea, air, postal, telegraphic, radio, and other means of communication and (2) The severance of diplomatic relations. Should these methods be inadequate the security council may take forced action necessary to maintain or restore peace.

For this purpose there shall be set up a volunteer mercenary army which will be on a full time basis and trained on leased neutral ground. The commanders and troops will not have more than 5% of the total from any one country and none may be from any of the countries which are permanent members on the security council. The purpose of this force will be to prevent fighting before it starts but will be equipped with all the modern weapons in case fighting does break out. It will be prepared for both conventional and nuclear warfare. None of the troops may be obligated to any govt. thus alleviating the problem of troops being called back.

Plans for the application of this non-fighting force will be made by the security council with the assistance of a military staff committee.

The military staff committee will be established to advise and assist the security council on all questions relating to the security council's military requirements for the maintenance of international peace and security. The committee will be made up of the chiefs of staff of the permanent members of the security council or their representatives. The military staff committee will not be responsible for the strategic direction of the U. N. arm, but act in a advisory capacity to the commanders of the force. This advisory capacity involves the direction of the force to trouble spots and recommendations as to procedure. The Military staff committee will have control over the use of the weapons of the force both in peace and in troubled times.

Nothing shall impair the right of individual or collective self-defense if an armed attack occurs against a member of the league. Any action must be reported to the security ^{council} at once and they must take action.

ECONOMIC AND SOCIAL COUNCIL: The arrangement in the charter seems to be workable and I see no reason to change it.

THE TRUSTEESHIP COUNCIL: This will remain exactly as it is now in the present charter.

THE INTERNATIONAL COURT OF JUSTICE: This seems to be the best set up for if the court were made stronger many countries would want nothing to do with it. The security council will serve as a court of appeals. It will be up to the court to define aggression in each individual case. I can see no way to make a set definition as it varies in all cases.

THE SECRETARIAT:

This will remain the same except for the further freedom under the security council and the general assembly. He is the chief administrative officer and will be appointed by the general assembly upon recommendation of the security council. He will appoint his own staff and is also in charge of the Economic and social council, and the trusteeship council.

The secretary general will not be obligated to the security council or the general assembly, except to advise and be advised on the best policy in a given situation. He may act independently as long as he is in line with the basic principles and purposes of the charter and as long as he is carrying out the wishes of both houses.
